Bus Rapid Transit

2009 was an extremely exciting year for ITDP's BRT projects. Just in time for the World Cup, Johannesburg, South Africa opened its new BRT system called Rea Vaya, or "we are going," in September. Connecting Soweto to downtown, this is the first real public transit system that has been implemented since the end of apartheid. People who normally had to crowd into small minibuses now have enclosed stations with real time information displays to inform them when the next bus is coming. The system has opened to rave reviews, and has raised the bar for public transit in sub-Saharan Africa. According to the latest figures, Rea Vaya carries approximately 35,000 passengers per day, and the city expects the system to eventually

Non Motorized Transport

ITDP has made significant strides in advancing the cause of cyclists and pedestrians this year. In Mexico City, ITDP helped the city create over 1,000 bike parking facilities, giving cyclists a safe and protected area to store their bikes. In Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires, more "Car Free" days were organized, freeing up normally congested city streets and encouraging people to get out of their cars. In Sao Paulo, ITDP helped bring about bike parking facilities for over 1,700 bikes. In China, ITDP is helping city authorities in Guangzhou to plan top quality bike lanes in tandem with the new BRT corridor, as well as a bike share program that is expected to be one of the largest in the world when

Sustainable Urban Development

In China, ITDP was able to push through improvements in the landscaping of the Guangzhou BRT corridor, creating an attractive pedestrian access and public space. In Mexico City, ITDP is working alongside city authorities and local planners to revitalize the downtown historic district. In Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, ITDP is working with Gehl Associates to help develop a concept around Madureira, a very populous part of town where the city would like to create large new parks. ITDP has been working with the City of Rio and the new mayor is interested in making some radical urban transformations that will improve the city's quality of life.

reach 80 percent of residents.

In October, the Ahmedabad, India opened its BRT system, termed Janmarg or "people's way," becoming India's first fully-featured BRT service with median stations, level boarding, and central control. Janmarg is helping revive the image of public transport in Ahmedabad and in India. The enclosed stations of the BRT system have become some of the finest quality public spaces in the city, and system opened to extensive media coverage.

According to the latest figures, Janmarg carries approximately 40,000 passengers per day. In January 2010, the City of Ahmedabad won the Sustainable Transport Award, in large part because of the improvements garnered by Janmarg.

Elsewhere in Asia, ITDP is helping the city of Guangzhou, China with its BRT, which started construction this year. This system is designed to be the highest volume and highest speed BRT in China, and is expected to open in early 2010. ITDP is also working with the city of Lanzhou to get their BRT plans off the ground.

In Latin America, ITDP opened its first office in Argentina, and already Buenos Aires started construction of its BRT, which is expected to launch in 2011.

After years of planning, ITDP was thrilled to witness the openings of two major projects in 2009.

in decades. In Harbin, ITDP developed extensive pedestrian facility improvement proposals and presented them to officials at major workshops. The team will continue to push the city to make those proposals into realities.

Since 2002, ITDP has been operating the Access Africa program in Ghana, Senegal, South Africa, Tanzania, and Uganda to promote and distribute bicycles to rural and low-income communities - giving them access education, employment, and healthcare. As of 2009, ITDP had supplied over 10,000 bikes, all while helping to build up local bicycle industries in each country. In cities where BRT systems are in development, ITDP is working to ensure that bike lanes are being planned and integrated as well.

India developed a street design manual that is for city officials to design complete streets that integrate with the urban fabric instead of streets that act as barriers for people to cross. It will be officially released in 2010.

Traffic Demand Management - TDM

ITDP believes that reducing the demand for private cars in cities begins with reducing free parking and free road use. By creating traffic management systems that regulate parking and charge for driving in dense metropolitan centers, individuals will turn to public transit as a more convenient and less expensive way to meet their transportation needs. By coaxing people out of their cars, cities can improve air quality, regain economic productivity lost to congestion, and enjoy safer and more liveable urban environments.

In 2009, most of ITDP's work in reducing traffic focused on parking research and reform. In Harbin, China ITDP is working on a study for presentation to city officials to assess and map the parking situation in the city and draw comparisons to other cities around the world. The ITDP team in Ahmedabad, India is working on providing the city with parking management recommendations. ITDP has also commissioned preeminent researchers in the US to develop a report that takes a critical look at "free" parking, due to be released in 2010.

ITDP works on the local, national, and international levels to encourage governments and other authorities to incorporate policies to reduce transport-related emissions and traffic congestion, while ensuring adequate funding for sustainable mobility programs.

A key component of this work is conducting research to educate decision-makers and stakeholders. Extensive research was conducted on two and three wheelers, with a report expected in 2010. ITDP is also working to document parking practices and develop a website that tracks information. A technical guide on bike parking is also in the works.

On an international scale, ITDP helped frame the Bellagio Declaration on Sustainable Low-Carbon Transport for Developing Countries, which laid the foundation for the Partnership for Sustainable Low-Carbon Transport, a group of UN organizations, multilateral development banks, technical cooperation agencies, NGOs, research organizations and other organizations dedicated to implementing transportation solutions to combat climate change. ITDP is also working to develop standards for calculating transport related CO2e in an effort to improve decision-making and accountability at development institutions.
